SUGA

sugar cane is a recyclable natural material that is very resilient. It also absorbs carbon dioxide, one of our biggest pollutants.

A sweet approach to the plastic problem.

Right now, climate change and plastic pollution are two of the biggest challenges we all face. SUGA is committed to making products that are safer for people and our world.

WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS ?

While sugarcane plastic isn't biodegradable, it is 100% recyclable. Sugarcane also absorbs carbon dioxide. The fact that it absorbs one of our biggest pollutants makes it far superior to oil. Oil-based plastics require mining for oil, and this process releases carbon from the Earth's soil, into our air. This process is a real kicker for climate changes. The less we rely on oil-based products, the better.

One of the perks of growing sugarcane is its resilience. It can grow in the weakest of pastures and actually helps recover the soil. Sugarcane waste known as bagasse is also used to generate electricity that powers the ethanol production process.

REUSABLE

OUR MATERIALS

plastic is made to stand the test of time, but sadly most are made from virgin materials with no recycled content. Off-cuts and wastage in production are simply discarded. Globally, eight million tonnes of plastic waste is dumped into our oceans. When they enter the ocean, they put our precious marine wildlife in danger.
